Queen in a hard hat

Looks and talent. Miss Massachusetts Lauren Kuhn does it all with style and substance.

Lauren Kuhn / PROVIDED

"Here she is — Miss America!"

While that somewhat sappy song may dredge up images of scantily clad women traipsing across a stage, the Miss America pageant actually focuses on talent and intelligence as well as beauty. As a result, today's contestants are not only among the most beautiful women in the nation, but also the most intelligent, poised and socially aware.

Case in point is the current Miss Massachusetts, Lauren Kuhn.

A native of Washington state (where she graduated from Gonzaga University after serving as her high school valedictorian), Kuhn came to Boston to attend the Harvard School of Dental Medicine and to conduct research at Beth Israel Hospital.

When asked how she became involved in the pageant world, the 2015 top-five finisher recalled following friends into the Miss America Teen program at the age of 16.

"You start at the local level, and then go on to the state and national levels," she explained, citing 23 regional competitions in the commonwealth. "I understood that talent was the biggest portion and that it was for scholarship money, so I had nothing to lose!"

In addition to the potential prize, Kuhn said she chose Miss America because it focused more on what contestants can do rather than what they look like.

Quoted

"The current Miss America is very, very beautiful, but that is probably not what made her win."

Lauren Kuhn

"The current Miss America is very, very beautiful," Kuhn said, "but that is probably not what made her win."

Noting that when she applied to Harvard it was only accepting 3.4 percent of all applicants, Kuhn is confident that the skills she developed as a Miss America contestant made the difference for her.

"They work you hard and really make you think," she said of the pageant judges, "and I think these skills will serve me well going forward as well."

One of the points that Kuhn was eager to discuss in her interview was student loan debt.

"I said, 'Honestly, I'm broke!'" she recalled, noting that she used the same "real" language when discussing loans with legislators in Washington, D.C.

"One of the representatives told me he would cosponsor one of the bills I had discussed," she said. "It allows refinancing loans when interest rates change."

When asked where her work ethic comes from, Kuhn thanks her parents.

"My dad owns a machine and hydraulics company," she said, recalling early days when she wore a hard hat instead of a crown, "and my parents have always wanted me to help with that."

Another way in which Kuhn has tried to set herself apart is by passing on her scholarship support.

"I had always wanted to start a scholarship," she said, citing another life goal, "so I had a garage sale and raised $500 and started with that."

Hoping to find a female candidate who was interested in STEM-related studies, Kuhn found a student at Boston Latin School who was going to UMass Dartmouth.

"She was fabulous," Kuhn said, adding that the scholarship has already grown to $1,250.

As she prepares to crown her successor, Kuhn continues to make appearances (including volunteering at Walk MS Wakefield on June 21 and singing the National Anthem on June 25 to open the Lowell Spinners season), study dentistry, lobby for student aid, play piano and do all the things that have meaning in her life.

"If someone says you cannot do something, " she said, "they are wrong!"

Police-involved shooting. Man shot dead near Boston University campus

A statie shot and killed a man who was wielding a knife near Boston University on Friday afternoon, authorities said.

Boston University Police approached Santos Laboy, 45, of Somerville, in connection with an open investigation and an active arrest warrant at about 2:20 p.m.

Police say Laboy took off and officers radioed for backup. A uniformed statie encountered Laboy on the Silber Footbridge near Kenmore Square and the Esplanade.

"He was brandishing a knife, threatening the officer," said Col. Timothy Alben, superintendent of the Massachusetts State Police.

The DA's office said it would "determine whether criminal charges are warranted in connection with the use of lethal force."

The incident comes weeks after police shot dead another man wielding a knife, Usaamah Abdullah Rahim, who they believed was plotting to behead Massachusetts police officers. NATE HOMAN

Sorrow, solidarity at AME churches

Grief. Amid tears, Boston's AME churchgoers comfort each other after nine people were killed in a South Carolina church.

A worship service was held on Sunday at the Charles Street AME Church on Warren Street in Dorchester, where special prayers were said for the victims of the South Carolina shooting. Rev. Grover, right, greats parishioners as they write condolences on a poster that will be sent to the church. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A woman opened her umbrella and stared at the flowers placed at the front door of the historic Charles Street AME Church in solemn reflection, praying for the victims of a shooting at the Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, South Carolina.

"These rains are heaven's tears for all the suffering," she said.

Dylann Roof, 21, is accused of opening fire in the Charleston black church, killing nine people and injuring three in what authorities are calling a hate crime. Roof evaded authorities until Thursday.

His racist manifesto along with images of him brandishing guns, confederate and apartheid-era flags have been seen worldwide.

"Sometimes I don't have the words to comfort people, " the Rev. Gregory Grover said. "I dig deep, but sometimes I can't find the words. But I've found that just being there with one another is a great healer and comforter."

Hymns and cheers rang out from inside the Charles Street Church in Dorchester, where worshipers embraced one another, some visibly in tears, others standing strong on the first Sunday since the shooting. The service focused on the acknowledgement of tragedy and the need for strength and unity in the face of trying times.

"You could tell the temperament and tone that people are in grief," Gregory said. "They are making the connection between this historic mother church and the mother church in Charleston. This hit close to home for all of us."

Quoted

"There were tears flowing throughout the service, some sobbing. ... I had to tell everyone to hug each other."

Rev. Gregory Grover

Grover said that he knew Rev. Clementa Pinckney, a South Carolina state senator; and Rev. Daniel Simmons, the associate pastor, both of whom were killed in the shooting.

"There were tears flowing throughout the service, some sobbing," Grover said. "At one point it got so heavy I had to tell everyone to hug each other and tell each other how happy they are to see each other."

People came from all around the greater Boston area to attend Sunday's service and show support for the congregation.

"It is only right for us to be here in solidarity," Trimble Ramsey of Melrose said.

The massacre in Charleston resurfaced hard and ugly memories from our country's history of bitter racial interactions.

"When I heard about this shooting, I recalled when I heard the news of the 16th Street Baptist Church bombing in Birmingham in September of 1963," Rev. Edie Scott of Alabama said. "We are here again praying for the nation."

Gregory said that while there is no one path to forgiveness, the parishioners will arrive at that conclusion as time goes on.

Fundraiser. The Longest Day climb in N.H. to fight Alzheimer's disease

Some of the participants / PROVIDED

Cohasset resident Matt Steele lost his wife Margie to Alzheimer's disease a little over a year ago. The devastating loss inspired plans for a weekend-long hike to raise money for research.

Steele, 58, joined forces with Jason Lynch, the development officer of the Mass/NH chapter of the Alzheimer's Association, to organize The Longest Day and The 48-Peak Challenge, which kicked off Saturday morning at New Hampshire's White Mountain range.

"The idea is we are all going to ascend the peaks over the weekend. And each team will have a picture in our purple shirts at the tops of each peak and create a giant collage," said Steele. "It is meant to be a show of strength and resolve to end this disease."

For the Alzheimer Association, The Longest Day represents the amount of hours in a day that caregivers have to devote to their loved ones suffering with Alzheimer's.

Teams from all over the United States participate by doing one activity of their choice for 16 hours, raising money for research.

On Friday, the Leonard P. Zakim Bunker Hill Bridge in Boston was lit in purple as a way to honor the longest-day and all those who participate throughout Boston and the U.S.

"The longest day and the 48-peak challenge were designed to bring people in the Alzheimer community, people who are impacted by this disease together," said Lynch. "Every day is the longest day for the caregiver. So this event was organized as a tribute to those caregivers."

Last year, after Margie passed away, Steele and his children climbed one of the Kinsman Ridge peaks in her memory. This year, they will be climbing that same peak.

"I have decided to carve out a piece of my life going forward to doing what I can to raise awareness and money for Alzheimer research," said Steele. "Also, this is something my wife and I did together. So that ridge is symbolic for me." KEELA SWEENEY

Seven things you need to know

1 Pope prays at Turin Shroud but skirts authenticity debate

Pope Francis prayed on Sunday before the mysterious shroud some Christians believe is Jesus' burial cloth but skirted the issue of its authenticity, saying it should remind people of all suffering and persecution.

On his first day of a visit to the northern industrial city of Turin, he defended migrants flocking to Europe to escape war and injustice, saying it "makes one cry" to see them mistreated.

He also spoke of the city's 19th century reputation as a center of devil worship and anti-clericalism, saying today's young people faced new snares of high unemployment, drugs and unbridled consumerism.

Francis was the latest of many popes to view the shroud, which is usually kept locked out of sight and is on display for only the third time in 17 years. Over a million people have seen it in two months.

After praying for several minutes before the cloth that has baffled scientists for decades, he touched its glass case and moved on to say Mass for 60,000 people.

The Roman Catholic Church has not taken an official position on the cloth bearing an image, reversed like a photographic negative, of a man with the wounds of a crucifixion. REUTERS

2 Tensions build as Supreme Court readies blockbuster rulings

Tensions are building inside and outside the white marble facade of the U.S. Supreme Court building as the nine justices prepare to issue major rulings on gay marriage and President Barack Obama's healthcare law by the end of the month.

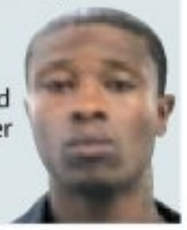
Of the 11 cases left to decide, the biggest are a challenge by gay couples to state laws banning same-sex marriage and a conservative challenge to subsidies provided under the Obamacare law to help low- and middle-income people buy health insurance that could lead to millions of people losing medical coverage. REUTERS

3 Suspect arrested in fatal shooting of New Orleans policeman

New Orleans police said on Sunday they had arrested the man suspected of shooting dead a city police officer who was transporting him to jail a day earlier.

Police said Travis Boys, 33, who was handcuffed, managed to grab a gun and fatally shoot Officer Daryle Holloway before escaping the police cruiser which crashed into a utility pole.

Holloway, 45, a 22-year New Orleans police veteran and a father of three, was found in his department vehicle with a gunshot wound and his prisoner missing. REUTERS



4 Pentagon to push allies to ditch 'Cold War playbook'

Defense Secretary Ash Carter will urge NATO allies to "dispose of the Cold War playbook" during a trip to Europe this week, as the alliance adapts to a new kind of threat from Russia and Islamic State.

Carter heads first to Berlin, where he is expected to call for a more muscular global security role from Germany. Germany remains hesitant to deploy troops abroad.

"He will encourage Germany, under the firm leadership of the minister of defense, to increase their security role in the world, commensurate with their political and economic weight," a defense official said. REUTERS

5 British business leaders plan campaign for EU exit

A group of British business leaders and entrepreneurs are preparing to launch a campaign for Britain to leave the European Union at a planned membership referendum, a major donor to the U.K. Independence Party said.

Prime Minister David Cameron has promised to renegotiate Britain's relationship with the EU ahead of a vote by the end of 2017, and is this week due to set out his reform plans in more detail at a summit of EU leaders in Brussels. REUTERS

6 Freak accident with marble slab kills NJ teenager

A New Jersey teenager died in a freak accident when he became wedged between large slabs of granite and marble outside a countertop store not far from his home, according to local news reports.

The body of the 17-year-old boy, who was identified as Jared Marchiano of Berkeley Township in local media reports, was found early Saturday morning. It appears the teen was trespassing when he somehow was crushed by a slab that was estimated to weigh approximately 650 pounds, the Asbury Park Press reported.

Authorities believe the death was accidental, but are trying to determine what led the teen to the counter store property, the news outlet reported. REUTERS

7 Shootings leave 3 dead, 10 hurt in Philadelphia

Three people were killed and 10 others wounded in a wave of unrelated shootings across Philadelphia on Saturday night.

Three children — including a 1-year-old girl — were among the 10 people injured when gunmen let loose a volley of birdshot at a packed cookout in Mantua, Philly.com reported.

The men fired into the 4100 block of Ogden Street around 10 p.m. Saturday night.

Seven adults as well as two boys ages 11 and 12, were also hit. All were in stable condition Sunday, the website reported.

Shortly after, a 21-year-old man was killed by gunfire at 37th and Mt. Vernon streets, about a mile from the block party.

Two other men were killed in separate incidents at two different bars early Sunday, according to Philly.com.

One of the men, a 25-year-old man was shot inside Johnny Ace Place, near 29th and Chalmers in North Philly, around 1:50 a.m., police said. No arrest was reported. ERNEST OWENS, METRO

Mourning shooting victims, Charleston church reopens

United. Outside the church, a large, mostly white crowd gathered to express solidarity with those inside.

Hundreds of people packed a sweltering Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston, South Carolina, for an emotional memorial service on Sunday just days after a gunman, identified by authorities as a 21-year-old white male named Dylann Roof, shot dead nine black church members.

"We are reminded this morning about the freshness of death that comes like a thief in the night," the Rev. Norvel Goff told a mostly black congregation.

Armed police searched bags at the door of the church, home to the oldest African-American congregation in the southern United States, and officers stood at intervals inside the church along the side of the nave and in the gallery.

Goff's rollicking sermon brought people alternately to tears and laughter as the church reopened to worshippers for the first time since the shooting. They whooped, cheered and raised their hands, and ended the service with embraces after Goff, whose voice rose to a shout at times, encouraged them to "hug three people next to you and tell them, 'It's going to be all right.'"

The suspect, Dylann Roof, was arrested on Thursday and has been charged with nine counts of murder. Authorities say he spent an hour in an evening Bible study group at the church, nicknamed "Mother Emanuel" for its key role in U.S. black history, before opening fire. REUTERS

The Foreman forecast

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN PREDICTS THIS WEEK IN POLITICS. HE IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY: A DAD, A DAUGHTER, AND A RIDICULOUS PLAN."

THAT'S A HOT ONE

At long last, summer has roared into the nation's capital, making everyone sweat like Rick Perry at a RuPaul picnic. (Yeah, I know, he's never gone to something like that, but seriously, it would be fantastic!) Then again, maybe it's not the heat. Some big waves are heading for the D.C. beach, and they're bringing my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. SURF'S UP AT SUPCO

All eyes are on the Supreme Court in anticipation of a massive ruling on Obamacare that could come any day. If it goes against the White House, it could be a massive wipeout for the financial formula behind health care reform, sending the program into a "death spiral." You would think that would delight Republicans who have long opposed it, but there is deepening concern that millions of families could find themselves adrift and looking for someone to blame. Could get gnarly for the GOP.

2. HEAT WAVE

In the immediate aftermath of the horrific shootings in Charleston, some lawmakers were stepping gingerly around the topic of guns, lest they be accused of unduly politicizing the tragedy. But you can expect talk on that topic to grow superheated now. This is a gimme for Democrats, who know they can come out strong for reform while never having to deliver, since new legislation stands virtually no chance of passing in large part because of Republican opposition. All the announced presidential contenders will no doubt be pressed on the issue, and Donald Trump ... oh heck, who cares what he does?

3. PASS THE SUNSCREEN

Expect blistering words on trade, security, human rights and more at the U.S.-China Strategic and Economic Dialogue. This will be a face-to-face meeting between representatives of the two biggest economies on the planet, and one of them stands accused of some nasty cyberhacking of late. Ahem ... China, do you have something you'd like to say about that? The U.S. says it won't be all lemonade by the pool, and to borrow from Buster Poindexter that means it could get "Hot, hot, hot!"

Rick Perry's lesson from 2012 US presidential bid: Be prepared

Rick Perry, the former Texas governor who is making a second run for the Republican presidential nomination next year, says he took away a major lesson from his failed 2012 bid: Be prepared.

The Boy Scouts motto is something Perry knows well as an Eagle Scout, the highest attainable rank in the movement.

But the conservative Perry, who announced his candidacy for the 2016 Republican nomination on June 4, said he was caught by surprise at the depth and breadth of knowledge presidential candidates were expected to have at their fingertips.

"Until you've done it you don't even realize what a challenge it is — these broad array of issues that you just have to have more than just passing knowledge of," Perry said in an interview on "Fox News Sunday."

The longest-serving governor in Texas history, Perry's 2012 candidacy fell apart in an embarrassing Republican debate performance when he could not remember the third of three government agencies he wanted to scrap, blurting out "Oops."

This time, the 65-year-old has presented himself as a more thoughtful, policy-oriented candidate, punctuated by thick-framed, wonky-looking glasses.

Taylor Swift breaks up with Apple Music gently

Taylor Swift and new streaming service Apple Music are never, ever, ever getting back together, but at least Swift let them down nicely. The singer issued a lengthy Tumblr post explaining her gripe that the service offers customers a three-month free trial but in turn doesn't pay any artist royalties for tunes enjoyed during those months. "These are not the complaints of a spoiled, petulant child. These are the echoed sentiments of every artist, writer and producer in my social circles who are afraid to speak up publicly," she writes. "We know how astronomically successful Apple has been and we know that this incredible company has the money to pay artists, writers and producers for the three-month trial period — even if it is free for the fans. Three months is a long time to go unpaid, and it is unfair to ask anyone to work for nothing." Maybe Spotify isn't looking so bad now?

Chris Brown teases further baby plans

Happy belated Father's Day! You know who recently became a father? Chris Brown. And you know what? He's feeling pretty good about it. "My main focus now is just my music, but my daughter first," Brown said in a recent radio interview. "When it comes to me being able to perform and do this, it's cool. But for right now, I'm doing it all for her." It's good to see that Brown really took that "Simpsons" episode chronicling Maggie's origin story to heart.

Also, he's thinking about giving baby Royalty a bigger family — eventually. "I think maybe [another kid] five or six years from now possibly so she won't be an only child," he says. "I've got brothers and sisters and I had a fun time picking on them. They were beating me up too, so my daughter needs a sibling." Hoo boy.

Laverne Cox wants men who love trans women to get some love

Between herself and Caitlyn Jenner, Laverne Cox has seen lot of positive moves in transgender visibility, but there's one area she still thinks is lacking. "Most men who are attracted to and date transgender women are probably stigmatized more than trans women are," Cox says during a SiriusXM interview. "I think a man who is dating trans women, who is a celebrity or famous or is an athlete or something, needs to come forward and needs to say, 'I love transgender women and [they] deserve to be loved and I'm going to declare that publicly.' I think those men need some sort of inspiration and hope, so they can live more authentically." So, any takers?

THE WORD

Ned Ehrbar takes on the world of gossip.

It's hard out there for a Dildo Throne

Earlier this year, North London resident Ralph Jones won a contest. The prize? A 6-foot-4 replica of the Iron Throne from "Game of Thrones," except festooned with more than 200 black rubber dildos instead of swords. And he was happy to win. Except for the part where it's too big to fit in his house. Instead of just warming up with some stretching, Jones called upon some better-equipped fellow fan to take it off his hands and offered it up on eBay. There was only ever one bid, but that was enough, and now Jones can sit a bit more comfortably at home.

Emilia Clarke is a talk show whiz

Graham Norton gets some pretty delightful "Game of Thrones" anecdotes out of star Emilia Clarke during her talk-show appearance — flanked by a tight-lipped Arnold Schwarzenegger and Jake Gyllenhaal — and still manages any spoilers from the recent season finale. Instead, they go back to the first season to talk about Jason Momoa's dearly departed Khal Drogo. I won't spoil it — this being "Game of Thrones"-related and all — but just know that Clarke saying, "It's huge and it's pink and I don't know what to do" brings the house down. Oh, and watch Gyllenhaal's face after Clarke casually says, "The lovely rape scene." It's priceless.

Embrace a little nostalgia while watching 'Edith'

Review. Company One's show about a trio of undersupervised teens showcases a more utopian side to teen life.

This feels like an appropriate response to solving a Rubik's Cube to us, but we wouldn't know because we've never managed it. / PAUL FOX

"Edith Can Shoot Things and Hit Them" could easily end with an intervention by children's services. A 12-year-old girl and her 17-year-old brother living alone in a remote farmhouse with almost no support or supervision from their absentee father couldn't possibly end well.

But playwright A. Rey Pamatmat's story feels like a whimsical allegory of adolescence where the teens call all the shots in their battles with loneliness, isolation, coming of age and authority figures.

It's charming when young Edith (Maria Jan Carreon) stands guard over the family home armed with a pellet rifle and bow and arrow, accompanied by her stuffed frog. It's equally heartwarming when her older brother Kenny (Gideon Bautista) feeds and clothes her and provides emotional support while getting her to school and all the age-appropriate extracurricular activities on time.

Together, the duo seems to have all the answers, which proves useful when Kenny's study-buddy Benji (Eddie Shields) is forced to live with them because he's working out his own teenage issues. As a trio, they're living the adolescent dream, at least until Edith (who does shoot things) actually hits something.

The script sags a bit when the teens are faced with grown-up issues that challenge their utopian existence. But the ensemble is so strong and the direction so tight that they plow through it with the joie de vivre of swashbuckling pirates fighting the bad guys (police, boarding school, father).

The fantasy feeling of this sweet little story is greatly enhanced by music and props of the time (late '80s/early '90s). A bright orange rotary dial phone, a Rubik's Cube (masterfully completed twice by Mr. Bautista) and preshow music like Paula Abdul's "Straight Up" serve to give audience members the soothing feeling of being right back in the era the play evokes.

And like any good allegory, it ends with a moral. When the going gets tough, heed the advice of George Michael: "You gotta have faith."

Netflix Instant
Few films beg repeat viewings like "Primer," Shane Carruth's 2004 time travel head-scratcher, which is impossible to fully unravel on first viewing, or on fifth viewing, or on 50th viewing. Not that those who've figured the film out have really figured it out. If there's a point to be gleaned from this micro-indie about two amateur scientists who have accidentally created a time machine, it's in watching something that started out as painfully complex spin even more out of control.

Night of the living Ashley Greene

Here's Ashley Greene in the relatively early stages of zombiedom in "Burying the Ex," now on VOD. / RLJE, IMAGE ENTERTAINMENT

Interview. The "Twilight" alum tells us what it's like to play a zombie in "Burying the Ex."

"I feel like I always gravitate toward these crazy characters," Ashley Greene tells us. She's referring to the TV show, "Rogue," she's shooting now, but she's also talking about "Burying the Ex," where the crazy character is Evelyn, a woman accidentally killed then inexplicably revived as a zombie who plagues Max, her ex-boyfriend (Anton Yelchin). It's the latest from "Gremlins"' Joe Dante, and it's also a showcase for the "Twilight" alum to go over the top — though not too over the top.

What draws you to crazy characters?
I don't know. I think it's [that] opposites attract. I hope. It may be because it throws you into that realm of being able to lose yourself in a role and not really worry about coming off as crazy. Because it's so far from who I am, it just takes the pressure off. It's almost like having a split personality.

She's the villain, but whether she's annoying Max before her death or eating people, she's not purely hissable.
I wanted people to be able to relate to her in some sense. I don't want her to be this controlling, unlikable, horrible human being. I didn't want to condone her behavior, but I wanted to understand her reasons for doing what she's doing. A lot of that comes from the insecurity of losing Max and her not realizing that they're just not right for each other. … Villains aren't generally villains just for the sake of being evil. Generally, there's something that got them there, some underlying issue not being dealt with.

Because she's slowly turning into a zombie, you have many stages of makeup. How horrible was that for you?
I probably wore six different contacts, sometimes two on top of each other. I'm no stranger to contacts because of "Twilight." This was definitely more intense; I'd never had to wear two contacts on top of each other. I don't necessarily enjoy getting up at four in the morning, but I do enjoy getting to set completely transformed. You move differently, and you speak differently. It's very helpful. Taking [the makeup] off was not fun. You work 14 hours, and at the end of the day, you have to sit there for an hour so they can remove the prosthetics from your face. On the other hand, I have a billion pictures because I thought it was so cool what they were able to do with prosthetics.

One more thing

Joe Dante is a big movie buff. Did you watch all the movies he told you to?

Not yet. They're still on my list. I have made a habit of sitting down to watch more television and more film. When I grew up, there was music in my house. We were only allowed to watch maybe an hour of TV a day. I'm not really programmed to sit down for long periods of time and watch back-to-back films. I've been trying to do it more because, obviously, it's in my best interest. [Laughs] One of my favorite things about being on location is the time to watch and do all the things you say you're going to do. I don't remember what the lightbulb moment was, but I realized, instead of wasting all my energy being upset because I'm sitting for hours twiddling my thumbs, I can learn another language or watch movies I've never watched. You know I've never seen "Body Heat"? I just watched that. I have a movie called "Bound" I've never seen.

How to think like an entrepreneur

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Microfinance heroine Jessica Jackley tells us what she learned from the hundreds of self-starters she's encountered in Africa and beyond.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

Jessica Jackley didn't set out to be an entrepreneur. She set out to help people. As a kid, she saved all her pennies to send to hungry children in Africa; she took service trips to Haiti. She even worked and lived in a home for teenage moms while holding down a full-time job at Stanford University. But it wasn't until she heard a lecture by microfinance guru Dr. Muhammad Yunus that she found her calling.

"At the time, I didn't even know it was happening," says Jackley, who started Kiva, a microlending site that matches lenders with entrepreneurs in poor or rural areas, with her husband in 2005. "It didn't feel like, 'Oh look, here I go becoming an entrepreneur.' It felt like I was tackling a specific problem or trying to address a very specific thing in the world that I wanted to change."

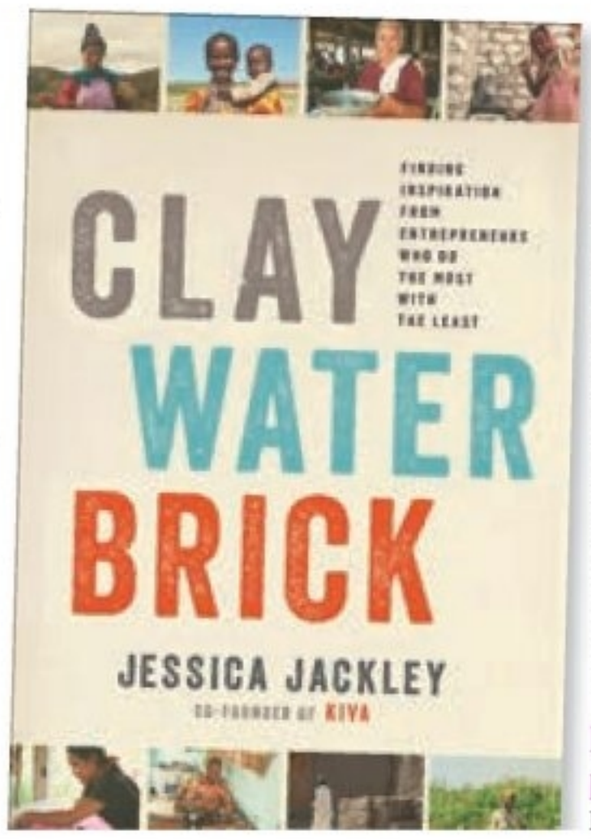
Now Kiva is the largest person-to-person microlending website in the world, lending some $720 million in 10 years. And Jackley has learned a lot from the hundreds of entrepreneurs whose businesses — from dressmaking to farming to building to brickmaking — she's helped fund. In her new book, "Clay Water Brick: Finding Inspiration from Entrepreneurs Who Do the Most with the Least," she shares their inspiring stories and gives some advice herself.

"I don't think everyone needs to be an entrepreneur," she tells Metro. "But I do think that everyone can approach life more entrepreneurially." We ask her how.

See opportunity and seize it

"Entrepreneurs do lots of things well, but two pieces are at the heart," says Jackley. "One is seeing opportunity. The next is being able to seize those opportunities and take advantage of them, creating value in the world out of that opportunity."

Take her friend Patrick, who figured out how to make stronger clay bricks from the mud outside his house in Uganda, or Katherine, who figured that the people in her village needed access to fish more than oil and other more readily available foods. "Seeing and seizing opportunity allow you to see the world through a more positive, solution-finding lens."



Don't overthink things

There's nothing preventing you from pursuing your goal, says Jackley, whether that's starting a business, writing a book or designing a new app. "We're a really introspective culture, which is a good thing, but what really struck me about the entrepreneurs I met is that they were just rolling up their sleeves and getting things done," says Jackley.

"[Entrepreneur and scholar] Howard Stevenson says entrepreneurship is the pursuit of an opportunity without regard to resources you already have," she adds. "That's what I saw again and again in East Africa. They didn't wait to have the resources to launch something — they went ahead and did it themselves."

Dream as big as possible

Most of us scale down our goals, managing expectations so we aren't disappointed. Yet, says Jackley, entrepreneurs aren't afraid to go big, even if it results in failure.

"It's easy to have daydreams and think, 'Maybe this will happen one day,'" says Jackley. "But there is so much that's possible — so much to do in the world. I really didn't know how big one individual's actions could be until Kiva surpassed my wildest dreams. Now, I'm getting really serious about dreaming big."

Don't do it alone

One big misconception about entrepreneurs is that they can do everything alone. Indeed, Jackley says the earlier you involve your friends, your mentors and your peers in your project, the better off you'll be. "When you share your dreams with others, you allow them to own those dreams for themselves too," she says. "They'll say, 'Yeah I want to see that happen in the world as well.' Those people are good to have by your side in those moments where you get stuck — either in articulating your dreams, tackling a problem or getting funding. It's better to have people on your side before asking something specific of them."

School of rock

"I am way more confident," says singer Maya Velasquez about singing in her class' rock band. PROVIDED

This month, 42 New York City public school teachers received training to teach Modern Band. That means, come September, 362 city schools will be offering classes on how to rock.

The initiative is part of Amp Up NYC, a collaboration between the New York City Department of Education, national nonprofit Little Kids Rock and Berklee College of Music in Boston. The program, now winding down its second year, aims to expand the district's Modern Band music program, which can include ukulele for elementary schoolers, composition for teens and even rock band opportunities for special ed. It also offers scholarship opportunities for students to attend Berklee's summer music camp in Boston.

"It's all about widening the door to music education," says Gabriel Cobas, director of Amp Up NYC. "Some music just doesn't fit the mold of your standard band and orchestra and choir classes, and this tends to be the kinds of music that kids already love and play outside of school. So why not use that music to engage them inside the classroom?"

It also has other benefits. Maya Velasquez decided to sign up for Modern Band when she transferred into iSchool in Tribeca this year as a 10th grader. "I was iffy about the 8 a.m. time at first, but I found it was a nice way to get to know people at my new school," she says. "I've always been singing, but I've never played guitar. At first, I was shy, but now I am way more confident."

Letters to the editor

We should do away with the Confederate flag

In Charleston, the U.S. flag and the state flag of South Carolina were lowered to half staff in respect for the shooting victims. But the Confederate flag continues to fly and is not even lowered to show some respect for the victims. The Confederate flag needs to be completely removed and sent to a museum before there is any further talk about forgiveness for the shooter for whom the Confederate flag was his treasured racist symbol. For forgiveness to be truly meaningful there needs to be repentance or a visible turning away from the attitudes and symbols that motivated the shooter.
GEORGE CHRISTIAN JR., VIA EMAIL

US needs to heal its divides

The U.S., once a great country, has lost its soul and direction. We are at war with ourselves. To quote President Lincoln: We are a "house divided" — a society of division.

We are made up of red states and blue states, not a United States. We are at war against women, blacks, Christians and Muslims, and the police and race relations are at an all-time low.

We have become a nation of hate not tolerance. We marginalize everyone who thinks and looks differently than us.

There will be no peace in our society because the media and many others want this chaos and divisiveness to continue.

The media knows exactly when to throw gasoline on a volatile situation like Baltimore and Ferguson and create more turmoil.

The media is the shepherd of hate and we are the sheep being brought to the slaughter.

Red Sox 13, Royals 2

Four Sox slap three hits in win

The Red Sox didn't need 16 hits and 13 runs to defeat the Royals on Sunday afternoon, but it didn't hurt. Boston's one-through-three hitters had three-hit games (Mookie Betts, Brock Holt, Dustin Pedroia) as well as Xander Bogaerts. David Ortiz, Hanley Ramirez and Betts also smacked home runs in the victory. Wade Miley tossed six scoreless innings to earn his seventh victory of the year.

It gets real: USA women begin knockout round

World Cup. The U.S. women face elimination tonight, but also a winnable round-of-16 battle against Colombia.

Now it starts to gets real for the U.S. women's national team at the 2015 World Cup in Canada as they have reached the round-of-16 (aka single elimination). On Monday, the team faces Colombia (8 p.m, Fox Sports 1). The winner advances to take on China on June 30 while the loser is eliminated and goes home.

There is no way to tiptoe around the fact that a loss to Colombia would be a colossal failure for the United States. The U.S. (2-0-1) won Group D which was unquestionably the deepest while Colombia (1-1-1) squeaked in thanks to a third-place finish in Group F. Team USA is a heavy favorite.

Even though they beat Nigeria 1-0 to wrap up group play on Tuesday, questions still linger about the Americans' uneven offensive attack.

"I'm happy with the way that we played with and without the ball," said U.S. head coach Jill Ellis. "We can attack with confidence if we have a good backline. It's a shame that we only scored one goal but we've very happy to finish at the top of a difficult group."

Something that American fans can feel confident about is the U.S. defense and goalkeeper Hope Solo, which have allowed just one goal (in the first match vs. Australia) in over 270 minutes of action.

Defender Julie Johnston was one of the more unknown players on the 23-woman roster coming into the World Cup but she has become one of their breakout stars, covering tons of area all over the field including a beautiful recovery run to quell a Nigerian breakaway attempt.

Abby Wambach and Alex Morgan were finally reunited in the starting lineup against Nigeria and Wambach delivered the game-winning goal: a brilliant volley off a Megan Rapinoe corner kick in the dying seconds of the first half.

It was Wambach's 14th goal all-time in the World Cup (tied for 2nd) and that could go a long way to getting her form back after she went scoreless against Australia and Sweden.

Midfielder Tobin Heath also earned her first start as Ellis went with a more offensive starting 11. Morgan played for 66 minutes (by far her longest stint of the first three matches) and she noted this weekend that she could go for longer against Colombia.

For what it's worth, Colombia came to Canada as the 28th-ranked team by FIFA. They opened with a 1-1 draw against Mexico (a CONCACAF rival that the U.S. absolutely owns), they scored a 2-0 upset win over France (the most stunning result in group play) and fell 2-1 to England.

As those results show, they certainly have the talent to make this competitive, but if the U.S. shows up, this shouldn't be too tall of a task to get to the quarterfinals.

Round of 16

Here's a look at how the Round of 16 is shaping out (as of Sunday afternoon):

- China defeated Cameroon, 1-0, to advance to the round of 8.
- If the United States defeats Colombia Monday they will face China next.
- Germany has already advanced, defeating Sweden, 4-1, this past weekend.
- France and Korea vied Sunday to determine who will go up against Germany and the French won convincingly.
- Australia defeated Brazil, 1-0, Sunday to advance.
- Japan and the Netherlands will play in Vancouver Tuesday night.
- Norway and England is the other Monday night game.
- Host team Canada faced off against Switzerland Sunday.

Team USA is happy to have had a big goal from Wambach last week.

Underachieving Sox happy to still have Buchholz

MLB. Clay Buchholz is emerging as a bright spot this season for a lackluster Red Sox pitching staff.

Buchholz boasts a decent ERA and stellar strikeout rate. / GETTY IMAGES

With the Red Sox' poor play of late, one player who has sort of got lost in the shuffle is starter Clay Buchholz. The right-hander is quietly putting together a solid season, which could be even better if he actually received some run support.

Buchholz currently is the best pitcher in the Red Sox rotation (not including Eduardo Rodriguez) as he's 4-6, but has a 3.87 ERA. His 8.8 strikeouts per nine innings are the best of his career.

He's really turned it on of late, coincidentally while the Red Sox have had their issues. Going into his seventh start, he had an ERA of 6.03, but over his last eight starts he's gotten it down to 3.87. In six of those starts he's allowed three earned runs or less, including two games not allowing any runs.

The biggest issue for Buchholz was the run support he received, as in that stretch he had a string of games where the Red Sox scored just one run in four straight of his outings.

June has been a little different, as he has won three of his four starts, including his last one, a 5-2 win over the Braves in Atlanta — the site of his worst major league start last Memorial Day when he walked eight batters. It was a totally different story this time around as he went seven innings, allowing two unearned runs on six hits, while walking one and striking out three.

"I underestimated it last year, the heat and how much that can affect you if you're not used to it," Buchholz said to reporters in Atlanta following the game. "I knew what I was doing coming into the game today. It wasn't a day game, so that helped out, too. But yeah, if you're not ready for the heat it can get to you. It's one of the things I wasn't going to let affect me today."

He's a much more confident pitcher than in the past few years and he's taken on the role of leading the Red Sox rotation, something that was mocked in the first month of so of the season. While it's less than half the season, Buchholz is outpitching Jon Lester in Chicago, as Lester sits at 4-5 with a 3.99 ERA.

The 30-year-old Buchholz was criticized a great deal the first month of the season and for good reason, as the results just weren't there, especially for a pitcher who started on Opening Day. But, while much of the focus with the Red Sox over the past month has been centered around weak performances, Buchholz is one player who has quietly gone about his business and emerged as the Red Sox' clear-cut No. 1 starter.
